QUOTES

By: Brittany Comer

It's impossible not to notice her first. Standing in the doorway of a picture-perfect home, surrounded by meticulously planted trees and a neatly manicured lawn. Shellie Hipsky just celebrated her 40th birthday but her appearance hasn't aged since 30. Her smooth, brown hair falls delicately around her slender frame and flawless, slightly tanned skin. "It's so great to see you again!" she exclaims with open arms. Her warm, genuine smile complements the gesture.

"Come in, come in!" The door slowly opens, revealing a living area with vaulted ceilings and oversized windows. The entire room is drenched in the dreamy glow of a hazy, late-summer sunset. She quickly checks on her son and daughter, both sleepy after a long day at camp.

A moment later she joins me and takes a seat at the dining room table. She smiles, nudging a tray of fresh fruit my way. As our conversation begins, I feel as though I am talking to a long time friend. Shellie is animated and witty. She laughs often; it's contagious. The performer in her radiates through every part of her being.

"When I was about 4 years old I hit the stage for the very first time. My mother, Libby Jacobs, ran the local theater in Akron, Ohio, and when they needed a kid they threw me on stage!" This upbringing contributed to the comfort she feels in front of a crowd.

Whether she's performing at a charity event, accepting an award for Pittsburgh's Best Business Woman of the Year, or staring in her own talk show, "Inspiring Lives with Dr. Shellie", she uses every ounce of the gift.

"I felt like I was in my own living room," she fondly describes the time she spoke at Pepperdine University. "It was like telling a story to a friend, but there just happened to be 1,500 people there." It's no surprise she was picked to speak at the university. She holds an impressive three degrees of her own.

"I was a little obnoxious about the last one," she laughs. "I wanted to get my doctorate by 30!" When asked about the difficulty of long commutes, time restraints, and the excessive workload she simply shrugged her shoulders. "I set a goal and I put on blinders until I get there."

Not only was Shellie a dedicated student, but she was also an exceptional teacher. From teaching elementary school special education students, to lecturing as a professor at Robert Morris University, teaching and mentoring have molded her into the woman she is today, most notably her work as a volunteer at the Healthy Start House in Pittsburgh, PA. This specific program assists homeless women and their children in receiving healthcare, developing and improving skills, obtaining employment and finding permanent housing. The program even collects new work-appropriate attire for the women, offering makeovers, spa treatments, and photography sessions for the families. These special, confidence-booting treatments were made possible because Shellie's own company, Inspiring Lives, LLC, coordinated with other female-owned businesses, like the Pittsburgh-based Treasure

THING."

House Fashions and Elliven Spa.

“When these ladies see themselves dressed up, polished up, ready to take on the world, they can finally see themselves as someone who can take on the world. It’s a beautiful, beautiful thing.”

Shellie Hipsky refuses to slow down. She hopes to one day make the Homeless Children’s Education Fund, an organization that focuses on advancing the educational opportunities of at risk children, a national charity. Recently, Shellie helped organize a successful Fabulous Forties Gala for the HCEF. The event offered the guests an evening reminiscent of a classy, 1940’s jazz club. Throughout the years Shellie has raised over $100,000 in similar galas for the HCEF alone.

When asked to reflect on a rewarding moment in her career, she smiles and thinks for a moment. “The talk show, ‘Inspiring Lives with Dr. Shellie.’” She looks off in the distance, continuing in a softer tone, speaking tenderly of the many people she interviewed.

“They are bringing their stories to help the masses because people can see themselves in those stories. All the people that I’ve interviewed have had these amazing stories and they’ve conquered them. Then they go on to help other people.”

Despite all Shellie Hipsky has achieved, she is determined to reach even more individuals with the 2015 release of sixth book inspired by her radio show, “Empowering Women”. She reveals her current dreams of landing on the New York Times Best Sellers List and performing on Broadway. “People joke that I’m going to be out there with my walker, belting it out on stage!” However, there’s more truth to that statement than humor; she will be singing on stage at charities, volunteering her time, writing books to inspire, and educating the lives of men and women globally for decades to come.

What is the “Global Sisterhood?”

Something almost magical happened as the words of these women went viral at <https://soundcloud.com/empowering-women-radio>. Others started taking notice. One such lady from Pakistan wears a veil and lives in a male dominated society. In a land where many women are denied education she has a master’s degree. Many are not allowed to be employed and she works as a women’s rights activist through SAWERA. Although she lives in a part of rural Pakistan where females are not part of decision making, she decided to reach out to the United States-based Empowering Women Radio. Hena Gul listened to Dr. Shellie’s interview with “Empowered Girl—Empowered World” conference leader Haseena Patel in South Africa. It is through Haseena that Dr. Shellie skypes in to schools to work with Power Circles of teenage girls in South Africa. Hena reached out to Empowering Women Radio and she was introduced to ladies with similar missions. After she bonded with Dr. Shellie and the connections were formed with incredible women around the world, Hena created the phrase a “Global Sisterhood” for what we are experiencing through Empowering Women.

What is “Common Threads?”

Tons of nominations poured into the website. Although some of the interviews were conducted over the phone and Skype, Dr. Shellie Hipsky traveled to many locations, including LA and NYC, to interview women who have realized and achieved their own versions of success in their fields. From women from humble beginnings who are now millionaires to a Broadway star, she interviewed 100 successful and empowered women while on sabbatical from her position as a professor at Robert Morris University. Dr. Shellie Hipsky believes that “Inspiration is just a story away.”

Based on 30 themes that arose in 3 main areas, the following books were published...Common Threads: Inspiration, Common Threads: Empowerment, and Common Threads: Balance. Women will be able to use the Common Threads book to see patterns in these women’s lives and create their own blueprint for success.
